

Proposed DRS default transfer process

We are proposing that in undefended DRS cases, the complainant should have the right to a transfer of the domain name registration on payment of a fee of £200 (plus VAT).
Please read our consultation paper for full details of this proposed default transfer process and then answer the questions below.

This document contains respondents between 91 and 91 inclusive.

1. What do you think about our proposal for a default transfer process?

I agree with the proposal

I don't mind one way or the other

I disagree with the proposal

2. Please give your reasons for why you feel this way about the proposal

This plays into the hands of complainants, which is surely not the intention.

There are also circumstances where details that were given during registration are out of date. I'm assuming that correspondence would be managed through email, and if the address has lapsed, the current registered owner would not even be aware that a complaint has filed against them.

If they failed to respond, am I right in thinking the domain would automatically be removed from them and transferred to the complainant? This seems wide open to abuse.
