

With regards payment option, the only fair solution is option 3.

I recently had a dispute with Nominet (our company is The Garden Pharmacy. A third party has a website. On the website, are many of our products plus many of our competitors. Nominet wanted £750 to push the matter further (with no guarantee of success.). Even had I paid and succeeded against the third party company -- who have done this domain copying with various other companies-- there would be nothing to stop them starting again with a minor variation of the domain name!

With kind regards,

Harry Ganz