

I have previously aired my opinion on the disputes procedure

1/ You appear to have a means by which to extract domain names for their owners off firms that have been wound up

2// You do NOT have a means to extract domain names owned by third parties off firms that have declared that they have ceased trading but not been wound up.

3/ The disputes procedure is pointless because the firm is no more, everyone's disappeared to the Bahamas whatever. There isn't anyone there to respond – the firm is effectively defunct and domain names locked in.

4/ It is beyond the means of ordinary people or small firms to pay £750 to sort this out

Jack