There seems no good reason not to. The US and no doubt other Countries have been able to do so, so why could the UK not?

As above for the two letter domains. However this certainly limits the scope, and as such increases the black market demand.

We outlined the technical reasons why com.co.uk, org.co.uk and net.co.uk should not be released. Do you agree with these exceptions?

Do you agree that "uk" should continue to be reserved from registration in co.uk, org.uk, net.uk and me.uk as recommended by the PAB?

We propose to take the same approach for two letter, one character and the other previously unreleased domains (e.g. pro.co.uk). Do you agree with this proposal?

- Yes

The PAB recommended a two stage release process: a first round for holders of registered trademarks, and a second round for names not taken by rights holders, open to holders of unregistered rights. Do you agree with this recommendation?

- Yes
- No

Please give comments

registered trademarks are only as good as they were on the day they were registered. If the company of the TM should become insolvent, then this adds complications for the process of acquiring the domain also (one cannot register a domain if the trademark still stands, regardless if the company has ceased trading)

We propose that initially commercial organisations should have priority in.co.uk and charities and not for profit organisations should have priority in org.uk. Do you agree with this approach?

- Yes
- No

We propose to hold a sealed bid auction for domain names where rights holders are competing, and for domain names not taken up by rights holders. Do you think there is a fairer way to allocate the first registration of these domain names?

- Yes
- No

We propose to hold a Dutch auction for the general release (“landrush”) of domains not taken up by rights holders. Do you think there is a fairer way to allocate the first registration of these domain names?

- Yes
- No

Please give comments, particularly in relation to the starting price for any Dutch auction.

keep the dutch auction, but regulate how many domains an individual can register at any given time period.

Do you have any other comments or suggestions about the proposed release of these domain names?

can I have PM.co.uk as they are my initials? Thanks:)
