

It is my belief that as many domain name connotations as possible should be available, including .net.uk, to the widest uk customer range. In this way, more people are likely to get the domain name they want. I would prefer that even more 2nd level domain names become available, e.g. .shop.uk, mail.uk, blog.uk. Possibly these can be licensed to reselling agencies, in order to maximise competition and fairness of availability. Of course control of the most popular commercial TLD's should be retained and regulated by Nominet.
