

Hi,

I think you are asking to much (in reality i wouldn't expect many to respond to this type of document), of most members to read such a detailed document.

A small member like us i just don't have time to spend on this at present, especially as i feel that bigger members will read it and there opinions will be better thought thru than mine and therefore they will do good, whereas my less well researched opinion may do more harm than good....

However i do have an excellent idea to help get a better response. Once you have finished the stage you are at now, summarise what the members that have responded have asked for and discussed etc and then...

1. Compile a short list of the top 10 most popular changes, summarise that in short email and give multiple choice questions to gauge how people feel about these changes.

2. Wherever there is a multiple choice question always have an extra box for a reasonable large comment to be made as multiple choice answers rarely cover every angle, but do encourage a higher response rate.

I think you see where i am going.....with this.

Hope this helps

Regards
Andy
